About The Beverly Country Club

Established over a century ago in 1908, The Beverly Country Club is a mainstay in the Chicagoland golf community. George O'Neil, the club's first golf professional, is credited with laying out Beverly's original course, reportedly with the assistance of well-known golf course architect Tom Bendelow. Beverly has been host to four Western Open championships, one National Amateur championship and three Women's Western Open championships as well as golf legends such as Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus and Chick Evans.

In 2002, The Beverly Country Club adopted a master plan to completely restore and rejuvenate the golf course under the expert guidance of nationally known golf course architect Ron Prichard. With its spectacular golf course stretching beyond 7,000 yards, Beverly was honored in 2005 as one of Golfweek's Top 100 Classic Golf Courses in the United States.
